In Sydney's own words....

"I fell in love with jewelry when I was young, rummaging through my grandmother's bureau drawers, enchanted by her treasure trove of costume jewelry that she kept in a jumble of tiny boxes, each with its own story. Since childhood I have accumulated and "curated" my collections of objects, found and acquired, assembling them in patterns and groupings that often inspire my jewelry designs. I think of these pebbles, shells, rusted metal fragments, and art objects as an archive of personal memories.

Working with the materials is the most exciting part of the process for me. Simply put, I like making things. In my one-of-a-kind pieces, I exercise my love of color, incorporating a wide range of colored stones in the designs. Another body of work focuses on sterling, sometimes oxidized, combined with high karat gold. Many of my designs are abstract, leaving the wearer open to finding their own personal, intuitive relationship with the piece."

Sydney Lynch is a nationally recognized studio jeweler who has lived in Nebraska since 1982. Her contemporary, sculptural designs are handmade using oxidized silver, high-karat gold, and a wide range of gemstones. Inspired by nature and her travels, Sydney's jewelry is bold and distinctive.
